Achieving Wholesome Nutrition through Diet supplementation

There is a global concern about the rise of non-communicable diseases. These ailments must be managed through diet control and physical activity. There is increasing awareness about healthy eating. Thanks to campaigns from governments, NGOs, and companies. A healthy, nutritious diet is the ultimate solution; however, it can be difficult to follow in people's busy modern lives. The diet needs to be supplemented to make it nutritious and healthy. This has resulted in the expanding market for nutraceuticals and functional foods. The nutraceutical industry in India is growing at a double-digit rate. Various products, such as probiotics, prebiotics, foods with plant-based ingredients, added nutrients, sports nutrition, weight management, and personalized nutrition, are gaining popularity. Consumers are also trying to understand the science behind these foods. Consumers are trying to understand the quality and efficacy of such products, as well as the bioavailability of the added ingredients. They want to know how the claims on these products are made. Product innovators face a challenging task in developing products that are tasty and acceptable to consumers while complying with regulations.

PFNDAI is happy to announce a one-day conference on 'Achieving Wholesome Nutrition through Diet Supplementation'. The conference will address all the issues mentioned above. This is a gathering of leaders from academia, industry, and policymakers. This multidisciplinary event will feature scientific presentations, case studies, panel discussions, and exhibitions showcasing the latest research, innovations, and product developments in the nutraceutical sector. It is an opportunity to update ourselves on recent developments through two technical sessions and a panel discussion. Please join us on September 12th, 2025, for this conference, on the occasion of Nutrition Month and the AGM of PFNDAI.
